

KIDS MOBILITY NETWORK, INC. PROVIDES WHEELCHAIRS TO CANCER PATIENTS IN GUATEMALA

LITTLETON, CO, October 8, 2007 – Kids Mobility Network, Inc., a Denver area non-profit organization announced today that it has provided wheelchairs to citizens of Guatemala who suffer from cancer. Through collaboration with the University of Colorado School of Medicine, Kids Mobility Network has provided several wheelchairs that will be delivered by members of the school's faculty and students.

"I am so pleased to be working with the University of Colorado to assist with this great cause," stated Christy Kopp, Executive Director of Kids Mobility Network, Inc. "Kids Mobility Network was formed to help people. This is the third time we've been able to help people outside the US, and we're pleased to help."

This is the second time Kids Mobility Network has collaborated with University of Colorado doctors and students to provide wheelchairs for guest patients from Guatemala. As Kids Mobility Network grows, the organization seeks further collaboration with University of Colorado and other organizations to expand its mission of helping children and their families to attain the appropriate durable medical equipment.
